Proposed at-large Board Members

Rob Danielson, La Farge - type@mwt.net, 608-625-4949. Rob's connections with non-violence go back to his upbringing in Oklahoma and conscientious objection to the Vietnam War. He was trained by Sara Backus for witnessing at the boat landings during the revival of the treaty rights of the Ojibwe in the late 1980s. Rob taught public awareness media-making in the UW-Milwaukee Film Department from 1976 to 2007. He worked with many artists and community leaders in addressing environmental, labor and social justice issues on public access television programs from 1981 to 1993. His public policy videos include "From the Ground Up," about citizen and local government response to sulfide mining proposals in northern Wisconsin, and "Home Remedies for a Violent City," about using non-violent responses to urban violence. Rob is active on energy and policy issues with the Town of Stark Energy Planning and Information Committee and SOUL of the Kickapoo. He also works in his retirement as a documentarian of natural soundscapes.

Annie Dutcher, Madison - annie.dutcher@gmail.com, 717-682-1253. Annie is a young passionate professional currently working at a non-profit dedicated to helping lung cancer patients live longer and better. Previously, Annie served as Volunteer Coordinator and Youth Garden Coordinator at a Latino resource center and in various capacities at a fair trade retail store. She currently serves as the chair of Madison Mennonite Church's Peace and Justice Committee. She brings experience in community building and organizing, fundraising, volunteer management and program development and is excited to apply those skills in her new role at WNPJ. Annie holds a BA in Applied Sociology & Justice, Peace, and Conflict Studies from Eastern Mennonite University.

Carlos Miranda, Madison - ricosindinero@gmail.com, 608-255-0376. Carlos Miranda was raised in southern California by working-class immigrants from Mexico. His father is a United Auto Workers member at General Motors and his mother is a farm worker at an agribusiness in Wisconsin. Carlos moved to Janesville in 1997. He obtained an associates degree at UW-Rock County and graduated from UW-Madison in 2007. Since May 2007, he has been at the Workers' Rights Center, an affiliate of the Interfaith Coalition for Worker Justice. There, he listens to and shares stories and best practices that help educate and learn from mostly low-wage, immigrant workers, with a focus on labor laws, improving working conditions, ensuring health and safety, and defending against illegal retaliation by management. Carlos takes great pride in having helped to develop a growing, worker-owned cooperative called the Interpreters Cooperative of Madison. It is through this business that Carlos has been able to survive financially, working with a small non-profit in order to continue his commitment to social justice.
