WNPJ - REFLECTIONS ON THE PAST; LOOKING TO THE FUTURE.

By Judy Miner (WNPJ staff 2003 – 2013)

Congratulations to the WI Network for Peace and Justice on its upcoming 25th anniversary. Special recognition goes to the ‘founders’ 25 years ago. These visionaries saw how interconnected our issues are and created a powerful umbrella for our work, as important today as it was then.

The beginnings...

On Feb 23rd, 1991, more than 350 people representing over 60 communities throughout the state of Wisconsin crowded into the State Capitol to gather strength from one another in their concern about the impending Gulf War. They were hosted by Senator Fred Risser and Representatives Frank Boyle and Midge Miller. WNPJ grew out of this first meeting, electing co-chairs, Steve Braunginn and Nan Cheney.

The first five years of WNPJ were filled with collective energy working toward a more just society. The Network continued to grow under the leadership of Bonnie Block, while Lance Green became the newsletter editor. By 1996 WNPJ membership had grown to 50 member organizations & 200 individual members.

In the Spring of 1998 WNPJ member organizations took to the streets to protest the expansion of the war in Iraq. There were demonstrations in Milwaukee, Madison, the Fox Valley, Oshkosh, and Superior-Duluth. In May, in response to the NATO bombing of Kosovo, WNPJ groups again organized demonstrations, teach-ins, & public hearings across the state.

By March of 2000, WNPJ was able to start hiring part-time office managers to assist Bonnie Block with the growing Network. Carol Kiemel came on first, followed in 2001 by Ilana Caplan, then John Graf and in 2003, Judy Miner. Bill Braham offered his volunteer services to developing WNPJ’s first website. That year Sam Day received the first Lifetime Achievement Award.

The first ‘Walk for Peace’ took place in 2002, initially going from Madison to Milwaukee. Volunteers continued to step forward - Hildegard Dorrer, Waunakee, took over as Newsletter Editor and Mary Beth Schlagheck used her organizing skills as WNPJ Conference Coordinator for the next decade. By now the budget had grown to $43,400, enough to hire a part time director by the end of that year. WNPJ moved into office space at 122 State Street in Madison and Alfred Meyer was elected as new WNPJ chair. In January 2003 Dana Churness started working as half time WNPJ Director.

George Martin was a presenter at that Fall Assembly in Watertown and called for a sit-in in Senator Kohl’s five statewide offices urging Kohl to vote against the “use of force” resolution in Congress. WNPJ also started its ‘Yard Signs for Peace’ project at the annual Fighting Bob Fest in Baraboo, “It’s Time for Peace. Stop the War”. Over 10,000 yard signs of red white or blue were eventually sold and distributed across Wisconsin! “War is NOT the Answer” and “United for Peace”.

War breaks out...

The U.S. invasion of Iraq began in March 2003 and the protests heated up once again. There were 38 Wisconsin communities now holding regular vigils against the war. Lanterns for Peace events were held in 20 different communities. Nonviolent civil disobedience actions took place at Truax, the home of the Air National Guard, at Senator Kohl’s office, and at the Federal Center in Milwaukee.

In 2005, as the Network continued to expand, we were able to expand the staff again, and Steve Burns was hired as a part-time program coordinator while Judy Miner, replaced Dana as coordinator. With these two at the helm, work began on a statewide Referendum question for the April 2006 WI ballot. “Bring Our Troops Home” won in 24 of 32 WI communities, giving WNPJ international and national press coverage. WNPJ coordinated 7 buses from Wisconsin, sending activists to Washington DC for antiwar work and lobbying.

Justice at home ...

A shift began in 2007 – acknowledging that there can be no peace without justice at home. WNPJ’s board met that summer for a racial justice training led by Groundwork. A decision was made that WNPJ will expand its focus to work on immigrant rights. Racial and prison justice work expanded, while work on other fronts continued. Todd Dennis was added to the staff to work on Veterans for Peace and IVAW counter-recruitment. We were walking for peace with Voices for Creative Nonviolence and serving Pancakes for Peace at the Midwest Renewable Energy Fair, as well as continuing our Board's anti-racism work. By 2008 WNPJ had 156 member groups and 427 individual members.

As Wisconsin legislators were considering lifting a moratorium on building new nuclear power plants, Diane Farsetta was hired to coordinate a 'Carbon Free - Nuclear Free' campaign. She organized a Lobby Day at the Capitol to urge legislators to take nuclear language out of the proposed Clean Energy bill.

Our special Spring meeting was held at the Oneida Sustainable Farm near Green Bay, where we learned more about Indian Mascot stereotypes and real corn.

The Wisconsin Uprising of 2011...

When Governor Walker, in February of 2011, introduced ACT 10, which stripped teachers' unions of bargaining rights and included other swinging attacks on Wisconsin's progressive heritage, WNPJ member groups responded immediately. We joined in as protests began. We gathered for our 20th Year Anniversary celebration with Code Pink's Medea Benjamin, who had just returned from the Middle East, where she had been present at the Tahrir square uprising in Cairo. She addressed the crowds gathering in the state capitol, where the occupation continued for six weeks. Steve Burns helped sustain the movement by introducing the Solidarity Singalong! The red songbook of pro-labor and civil rights tunes which he created and the daily hour long sing-along in the Capitol rotunda at noon is still going, 5 years later.

Expanding our focus once more, we had Winona LaDuke as our keynote speaker FOR our 20th Year Anniversary Assembly, and the following year WNPJ coordinated an outreach campaign around the use of drones in the U.S. war strategy. Actions were carried out at the drone aircraft training facility of Wisconsin National Guard near Mauston, with Kathy Kelly of Voices for Creative Nonviolence leading the way.

Staff changes again ...

In 2013, Judy Miner and Steve Burns resigned & Page Metcalf is hired as office coordinator. Then Z! Haukeness and Dace Zeps were brought in as new staff when Diane Farsetta resigned in 2014. WNPJ continues to focus on injustice issues – joining in with others working on Black Lives Matter and prison justice rallies. Energy is currently focused around the WNPJ Racial Justice Tipping Point (RJTP) Campaign, an initiative to recruit more citizens in Wisconsin to be involved in racial justice work. RJTP encourages Wisconsinites to regularly engage with neighbors, community leaders, and politicians about changing the laws, policies, and practices that make Wisconsin a damaging environment for black people.

Looking forward...

Here's a shout-out for all we've done under the WNPJ umbrella for 25 years: promoting nonviolent civil resistance in Wisconsin and for promoting racial justice and income equality.

* We've stopped ELF and the big mines – and Nestle from taking our spring water.

* Several generations have learned that war is NOT the answer – and have joined their neighbors standing on street corners with signs, vigiling for peace.

* It seems that there is even more new energy now for change, and the social media tools we have make it easier, perhaps, to be connected.

Thanks everyone. I'm eagerly looking forward to the next chapters....

RACIAL JUSTICE TIPPING POINT CAMPAIGN AND UPCOMING EVENTS

By Z! Haukeness

On Saturday May 21, The Wisconsin Network for Peace and Justice held its kickoff event for the Racial Justice Tipping Point campaign. This campaign aims to engage 3.5% of Wisconsin residents in racial justice work. The target of 3.5% is drawn from a study done on social movements that have used non-violent action and at least 3.5% of the population actively participating in these actions. Our strategy is rooted in engaging our network of peace and justice oriented groups in a process of learning, personal and organizational change, and action with new partners across the state. We will provide technical assistance and training to develop focused racial justice efforts rooted in three areas:

1. Education
2. Engagement/base building
3. Direct action

Our work for the next five to ten years strives to engage 3.5% of the population in the fight for racial justice in order to shift broader policy and culture. In Wisconsin, that is 200,000 people. How many people is it in your community? To illustrate the impact of this mass-engagement, imagine the recent day of action at the state capitol to protest new anti-Latin@ legislation. What if 200,000 people showed up rather than 50,000? What if those same 200,000 educated themselves and their neighbors, or made a phone call to their senator? We imagine 200,000 people regularly holding living room conversations on race, communicating with legislators, or attending community events about ending racism across the state. We imagine if Wisconsin no longer showed up on the many lists and reports as one of the worst places for Black people to live. Through this mass-engagement, we envision shifting policies, legislation, and culture, beginning the path towards being a top ranking state for people of color, just as it is for white people.

RJTP Kickoff Event

We are ready to make a change.

Building on this kick off we will be hosting at least 3 more trainings in the near future: in September we will do a similar training in Fond du Lac for 75 people, in October we will work with a partner organization to train their staff and volunteers, in January we will do a training with another partner network and their 50 member organizations which will be around 100 people in Milwaukee, In November a training in partnership with the nation Native Organizers Alliance for around 30 people likely in the La Crosse area, and various other trainings that will arise from organizations that have signed onto the campaign. We have held our first follow up conference call and have our next two planned for August 22nd and September 22nd on relevant racial justice topics. We will continue these calls regularly throughout the year. In the spring we will be hosting a more in-depth 2-3 day training for 200 people.

We have highlighted 10 different projects or campaigns for RJTP signers to take action on from signing petitions to getting into the streets. We are following up with those who committed to get their organizational members to sign onto the statement at our kick off gathering. We are making strides and want to connect with you! Let us know if you have questions or want us to offer any support for your work: zh@wnpj.org.

The Racial Justice Tipping Point Team from WNPJ is “taking its show on the road!” The Congregation of Sisters of St. Agnes has invited the team to Fond du Lac on September 17th to conduct a workshop focused on achieving greater equity in WI. Marian University, a co-sponsor, will host the program at the Stayer Center from 8:30-4:00. Agnesian HealthCare is also supporting the workshop, as are other local organizations that are dedicated to honoring diversity.

“WNPJ’s Racial Justice Tipping Point Campaign is a critically important initiative for Wisconsin,” says Sister Sally Ann Brickner, Coordinator of Justice, Peace and Integrity of Creation for the Sisters of St. Agnes. “We want Fond du Lac reach its “tipping point” and create an unstoppable movement toward equity and harmonious relations among all who live in this community. Many good things are already happening here, and the RJTP workshop will build on that foundation.” Scholarships are being offered so that cost will not be a barrier to attendance.

A MOMENT OF GREAT PROMISE: AGREEMENT TO END THE ARMED CONFLICT

By the Columbia Support Network

We celebrate the agreement between the FARC guerrillas and the Colombian government to end 52 years of armed conflict through a verifiable agreement for a bilateral ceasefire. We fervently hope that the serious issues facing Colombia can now be addressed through dialogue and negotiation, without any party seeking to enforce its concepts through a call to arms. The transitional justice system, while complicated and sure to be very costly, holds great promise for a lasting peace with social justice, as long as a strong commitment by the government and civilian society supports the application of the procedures decided upon.

The presence of the international community in support of the agreement to end the armed conflict and to submit the final agreement for approval by the Colombian people gives assurance that a very substantial effort will be made to carry through the points of the agreement. The role of the countries who have formally supported the peace negotiations from the beginning — Cuba and Norway as well as Venezuela and Chile — has been fundamentally important. Their continued support and that of the international community in general will remain very important.

We believe, however, that this peace agreement will only hold if certain measures are taken to improve the conditions under which millions of Colombians live. The Colombian government must address the fact that Colombia has one of the most unequal distributions of wealth in the world. Effective land restitution to those who were forced out of their homes and their lands must occur — Colombia now has the highest number of internally-displaced people in the world, according to the latest report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), 6.9 million out of a population of 48 million. And the voice of the campesinos, Afro-Colombians and indigenous peoples expressed in the Agrarian Summit and the MINGA must be heeded. Paramilitary groups — however the government calls them, bacrim or emergent paramilitaries — which are active throughout much of the country, must be dismantled. We are concerned that on several occasions the government has sent militarized anti-riot police, the ESMAD, to break up legitimate social protest by unarmed civilians. Militarization of the peace would be a terrible mistake.

The arrival of peace in the countryside, which is a fundamental concern of the peace agreement, must be matched by a commitment by the Colombian government to protection of labor leaders. Colombia's sorrowful record as the country where more labor leaders are murdered every year than in any other country in the world needs to change. We hope the arrival of peace will be matched by protection of workers' right to organize. We also hope that, in a Colombia at peace, the issues of protection of the environment and safeguarding the country's paramos (ecosystems) from multinational mining corporations will be given priority. The favorable results of establishing peace must be passed on to future generations through protection of the extraordinary natural resources Colombia possesses.

We congratulate the government and the FARC negotiators for arriving at a detailed peace agreement with a feasible road map to lasting peace. We look forward to the addressing of the issues we have mentioned as necessary to achievement of a lasting peace.

We urge the U.S. Administration to stop funding and supplying weapons to armed 'rebels' in violation of international law and end the policy of forced "regime change".

We call for an urgent nation-wide public debate on the U.S. policy of "regime change"

Members of the Center for Citizens Initiative (CCI) delegation currently visiting Russia include Ann Wright, Elizabeth Murray, Raymond McGovern, Kathy Kelly, David Hartsough, William H Warrick III, Sharon Tennison, Robert Alberts, Peter Bergel, Karen Chester, Jan Hartsough, Paul Hartsough, Martha Hennessy, Bob Spies, Rick Sterling, and Hakim Young. Massive nuclear arsenals are once again on high alert in the United States and Russia. Misunderstandings, fallacious accusations, flare-ups and demonizing propaganda have covered print media and television screens for two years. CCI sees the need and possibility for changing this situation. When real people in large numbers get involved, amazing things begin to happen. Join us! Let's help reduce the tensions existing today between the two Superpowers. <http://ccisf.org>

WHAT'S AT STAKE

By Kathy Kelly, June 23, 2016

In the historic port city of Yalta, located on the Crimean Peninsula, we visited the site where Churchill, Roosevelt and Stalin, in February of 1945, concluded negotiations ending World War II.

These leaders and their top advisors were also present at the creation of the United Nations and other instruments of international negotiation and non-military cooperation. Tragically, the creation of the "Cold War" was underway soon after. Reviving tensions between the United States and Russia make it seem as though the Cold War might not have ended.

We also met with groups of young adults, teachers, and veterans of foreign wars. At each meeting, participants readily agreed that new peace agreements are needed.

Olga, a tour guide, told me that she was fairly sure most young people here in Yalta would know what NATO is, what the acronym stands for, and they would know about recent NATO developments. Our delegation has been wondering how to cope with a quite different reality in the U.S., where many people may be poorly informed about NATO and would know even less about the Anti-Ballistic Missile treaty that the U.S. more or less tore up in 2001.

The Federation of American Scientists, in its 2016 inventory of nuclear forces, states that approximately 93 percent of all nuclear warheads are owned by Russia and the United States who each have roughly 4,500-4,700 warheads in their military stockpiles.

Konstatin, a veteran from the USSR war in Afghanistan, now a grandfather, spoke to us about Yalta's history during World War II. "Many people perished here," he said. "More than a million perished during WWII. This tourist resort was founded from the bones of people killed in the war." Some 22 million Russians overall died during World War II, most of them civilians. Konstatin urged all of us to find ways for avoiding further war, and he spoke about how funds spent on weapons are crucially needed to help heal children afflicted by disease or hunger. Julia, a University student who wants to become an interpreter working with diplomats, said that she is glad and grateful never to have lived through a war. "I always want to choose words instead of weapons," Julia said.

We asked university students what they thought of prospects for abolition of nuclear weapons. Anton, who studies engineering, told us that he believes "the youth of different countries would like to bridge the gap and work out ways to unite people." His words are extremely important now, as Russia and the U.S., possessing such huge stockpiles of nuclear weapons, engage in intensifying conflict. "All of us should soften the geopolitical relations between our countries," Anton continued, "and try to get together on the same level, on the same ground. The idea of this future should be attractive to everyone and enable us to solve ecological problems. And if we all put efforts into reaching this idea of development and creativity, in the future, then the nuclear abolition will be something we can accomplish"

In 1954 the Soviet government transferred this largely Russian-speaking area from Russia to the Ukraine. In 2014, after Ukraine's elected president was ousted and its new government formed in part by avowed neo-Nazis, Russia occupied the Crimea and after overwhelmingly winning an uncomfortably hasty vote, annexed it or "reunited" the Crimean peninsula with Russia, depending on who describes the history. The Ukraine ouster, it is widely believed here and in much of the world outside the United States, is considered to have been engineered by the United States and NATO. What plays in the U.S. as Russian aggression is seen by many here as a response to antidemocratic NATO interference along the Russian border.

It can be credibly argued that at its creation NATO's mission was essentially defensive. Stalin was a terrifying dictator, suffering from increasing psychosis, with a long history of betraying even those who seemed to be his closest allies. Yet, as one Russian World War II veteran noted, the Russians had not tried to take over other countries far from their borders. They actually had been very cautious and conservative about extending the boundaries or reach of the Soviet empire by military force, and after World War II Russia needed to focus on rebuilding the internal Soviet economy and society.

The continuously assertive military posturing of NATO undermines and conflicts with the mission and development of instruments for international negotiation and constructive cooperation. Among the most striking examples in recent years are:

1. The decision to expand NATO into eastern and southern Europe by accepting the membership or candidacy of countries as far south as Georgia;
2. The 2001 decision by George Bush to abrogate the U.S. – Russian Anti-Ballistic Missile Systems treaty and to build a so-called ballistic missile shield system in East European countries, allegedly intended to protect against prospective Iranian missile launches directed toward Europe;
3. The 2001 to the present decisions by the U.S. and NATO to invade Afghanistan and to establish long term military bases there, anchoring a military presence in the center of Central Asia.

New conflicts around the Ukraine are still brewing. Milan Rai, writing for Peace News, helps put this conflict in context:

"Since Vladimir Putin's first ascendancy to the Russian presidency in 2000, the Russian state has used its armed forces against other countries twice: against Georgia, in 2008; and now against Ukraine... In the same time period, the U.S. has used its armed forces in a criminal fashion against a number of countries, including: Afghanistan (2001-present); Yemen (drone attacks, 2002-present); Iraq (2003-present); Pakistan (drone attacks, 2004-present); Libya (2011); Somalia (2011-present)....

The western powers are in no position to lecture Putin, whose actions in Crimea look like a Gandhian direct action when compared to the normal U.S.-UK mode of operation. From 28 February to 18 March, Russian forces captured over a dozen Ukrainian bases or military posts without the loss of a single life. Compare this to the U.S. use of tank-mounted ploughs to bury alive perhaps thousands of Iraqi conscripts in desert trenches during the opening moves of the 1991 invasion of Iraq. (U.S. colonel Lon Maggart, in charge of one of the brigades involved, estimated that between 80 and 250 Iraqis had been buried alive.)

When one thinks of the number of deaths caused by U.S.-UK aggression since 2000, including the grim ongoing tragedy of the Iraqi civil war, it is difficult to listen to the wave of western outrage.”

“This is not to deny that Putin has presided over a repressive administration,” Mil continues, noting that Putin has also carried out atrocities, particularly the indiscriminate bombing of civilians in the southern Russian republic of Chechnya, which followed massacres and the enforced disappearance of hundreds, perhaps thousands, of Chechens.”

I believe that the greatest threat to the long range peace and security of Europe and the United States is the reality that the military sectors of western governments and the military spending sectors of western economies are so huge and bloated, like incurable cancers, that they cannot give up on inventing military threats and advocating military solutions which powerfully undermine diplomatic efforts to secure peace.

I hope Anton’s ideas will echo in the U.S. and help steer his generation toward pursuit of new acutely needed agreements.

CALL FOR A NATIONAL DEBATE ON U.S. “REGIME CHANGE” POLICY

By Center for Citizen Initiatives delegation visiting Russia in June 2016

On June 16, the New York Times reported:

“More than 50 State Department diplomats have signed an internal memo sharply critical of the Obama administration’s policy in Syria, urging the United States to carry out military strikes against the government of President Bashar al-Assad to stop its persistent violations of a cease-fire in the country’s five-year-old civil war.

The memo, a draft of which was provided to The New York Times by a State Department official, says American policy has been “overwhelmed” by the unrelenting violence in Syria. It calls for “a judicious use of stand-off and air weapons, which would undergird and drive a more focused and hard-nosed U.S.-led diplomatic process.”

We are a group of concerned U.S. citizens currently visiting Russia with the goal of increasing understanding and reducing international tension and conflict. We are appalled by this call for direct U.S. aggression against Syria, and believe it points to the urgent need for open public debate on U.S. foreign policy.

We note the following:

1. The memo is inaccurate. There is no ‘cease-fire’ in Syria. The ‘cessation of hostilities’ which was agreed to has never included the major terrorist groups fighting to overthrow the government in Syria. This includes Nusra (Al Qaeda), ISIS and their fighting allies.

2. A U.S. attack on Syria would be an act of aggression in clear violation of the UN Charter. (Ref 1)

3. The supplying of weapons, funding and other support to armed groups fighting the Syrian government is also a violation of international law. (Ref 2)

4. A U.S. attack on Syria would lead to more bloodshed and risk potential military confrontation with Russia. With arsenals of nuclear weapons on both sides, the outcome could be catastrophic.

5. It is not the right of the USA or any other foreign country to determine who should lead the Syrian government. That decision should be made by the Syrian people. A worthy goal could be internationally supervised elections with all Syrians participating to decide their national government.

6. The memo reportedly says, “It is time that the United States, guided by our strategic interests and moral convictions, lead a global effort to put an end to this conflict once and for all.” Similar statements and promises have been made regarding Afghanistan, Iraq and Libya. In all three cases, terrorism and sectarianism have multiplied, the conflicts still rage, and huge amounts of money and lives have been wasted.

In light of the above, and the danger of escalating global conflict:

We urge State Department officials to seek non-military solutions in conformity with the U.N. Charter and international law.

SAVE THE DATE! WNPJ FALL ASSEMBLY, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 15TH!

WNPJ is celebrating 25 years of work towards the realizations of a peaceful, just, and sustainable world!

Our individual and organizational members have done a tremendous amount of work both together in coalition and apart on their own work during this time. WNPJ is proud to have helped advance this work and to offer overarching campaigns to support specific state needs.

This year's Fall Assembly, happening Saturday, October 15th, in Madison will be a celebration of these past 25 years together as a network. We will take a longer look back with a panel discussion of our history. We will honor our past board members, staff, and volunteers.

We will present our Lifetime Achievement Award to Steve Braunginn, one of our original co-chairs. And, of course, there will be the usual short business meeting to elect this year's new board and approve the budget.

We invite you all to join us for this very special celebration! Please go to wnpj.org for more information about the Fall Assembly.

WNPJ AT THE ENERGY FAIR

Pancakes for Peace at the Energy Fair

Vets for Peace - Milwaukee at Energy Fair

Wisconsin Network for Peace and Justice hosted our Annual Pancakes for Peace fundraiser at the Midwest Renewal Energy Association's 27th Annual Energy Fair. It was a great time to connect with members and member groups from around the state. Several were there to present workshops and eight member groups had informational tables at the fair. WNPJ always open its table to all member groups and this year we were joined by Madison Area Mining Alternatives promoting their Save the Land, Leave the Sand campaign. As you plan your outreach strategy for next year, consider joining us at the Energy Fair.
